SUMMARY

Subject of the thesis: Gender Aspects of World Politics.

Author: Diana Butenko

Academic Adviser: Soloveva E.A., PhD, Political Science.

Organization: School of International Relations, Chair of International Relations, World Economy and International Law, Pyatigorsk State Linguistic University.

Relevance of the research issue: The evolutionary process of human development has undergone many transformations. Present stage is characterized by significant changes in the gender composition of the global political culture. Also becoming increasingly important issue of establishing gender equality in society, parity between men and women in representative political bodies and design not only de jure but de facto status of women as a full citizen. A rapidly growing role of women in political power finds expression not only in their participation in parliaments States and local governments, and also in various spheres of public life, non-profit and public organizations. Lack of effective mechanisms, tools and strategies developed social support women as a political figure and eliminating gender disparities is essential omission of gender policy, which needs serious improvement.

The purpose of the work is the systematic analysis of the gender dimensions of world politics, defining the role of women in the Modern World and the process of selection of the most effective mechanisms to support women as a political figure.

Research objectives:
- to systematize the conceptual approaches to the definition of "gender" as a category of modern political science;
- to determine the degree of influence of feminist ideas and concepts to the increasing role of women in the political processes of modern world;
- to reveal the historical aspects and modern trends qualitative transformation of the role of women in the global political process;
- to identify the main problems of gender inequality at the present stage and propose possible mechanisms to support and protect women as a political figure.

Scientific novelty is to systematize the objective aspects of gender composition of world politics, a comprehensive analysis of trends and prospects for increased political influence of women in the world community, as well as the proposed mechanisms to solve the problem of compromising a woman as a politician.

Structure: the work consists of 2 chapters, containing 4 paragraphs, the conclusion, a 73-reference bibliography (25 of which are in foreign languages) and the 4 Appendixes. The total volume is 70 pages.

Summary: Despite the existence of a number of problematic issues in relation to gender, the escalation of women's role in world politics, diplomacy and international relations, every year it becomes more and more obvious. Gender equality, gender discrimination and the struggle for political, social and economic rights have always been significant problems of society, who designed the stage for analysis and research scientists worldwide.

Modern political processes are characterized by gender, as complex social environment in which the modern woman needs to maintain a balance between professional activity and biological female responsibilities, lack of development of effective tools and mechanisms aimed at increasing women's political participation, the negative impact of the media on the positioning of women as a politician, as well as passive state gender policy.

It was natural to offer such methods to improve the gender composition in the modern political process as a method of quoting, funds assistance to women victims of discrimination, the growing influence of international women's organizations through active social policy, and the establishment of various centers of psychological support and advice on infringement rights and freedoms of the female population.