SUMMARY

Theme: «The terrorism and the religious and political extremism within the Conflict Management Research (through the example of the North Caucasus)».

Author of the paper: Khashukaeva O.O.

Scientific adviser: Draganov A. A., candidate of political science.

Organization: The Institute of International Relationships; the conflict resolution studies, public relations and journalism department; Pyatigorsk State Linguistic University.

The relevance of the research work: Modern terrorism is a factor of global importance, to be reckoned with by any government and society in assessing the prospects for its development. Awareness of the dangers of terrorism due to the fact that the process of development and decision-making in a crisis process is significantly different from what happens in a normal, non-crisis situation.

One of the most pressing problems of our time, affecting all aspects of social life and, in particular, causing a direct threat to carrying out the economic reforms, the social destabilization factor is the steady growth of criminal manifestations of terrorism in the dynamics of growth of organized crime and corruption, an increase in the proportion of potential terrorism and serious particularly serious crimes.

This situation actualizes the efforts of the authorities, the law enforcement agencies, and the public to ensure the effective control and the prevention of terrorism. A prerequisite for such attitude is the knowledge of the true extent of the terrorist activities, the manipulation of the actual performance of their condition, and not only just the part that is reflected in official statistics.

The research purpose is the determination of the level of the conflict potential of the modern North Caucasus through the prism of religious and political extremism and terrorism.

The research goals are:

1. to identify the basic concepts of the terrorism and its modern varieties;
2. to determine the place of religious and political extremism in the Conflict Management knowledge;
3. to describe the role of the terrorism in the modern political science and the conflict resolution studies;

4. to demonstrate the effect of the terrorist activities of some religious organizations in the North Caucasus on the security of the region;

5. to mark out the features of the religious and political extremism and the terrorism in poliethnoconfessional society;

6. to describe the special characteristics of the ideology of religious and political extremism and the terrorism in the North Caucasus.

The research work structure: an introduction, 2 chapters with 6 clauses in each, a conclusion and references with 73 resources, including 7 sources in foreign languages. The total volume of the research work is 47 pages.