Relevance of the research issue: In the context of today's world globalization processes and trends the effective existence of any state depends largely on economic factor - successfully implemented economic strategy focused on the country's integration into the world community, that supports the growth and prosperity of state and its establishment as a real center of power in international relations.

At this stage economic diplomacy is becoming an external policy priority and is gaining an increasing attention from national states, which, in turn, actualizes the task of scientific understanding of the phenomenon as a political science category.

In addition the study of the experience of forming an economic strategy of China, its foundations, methods and forms of realization can be a good opportunity and prospect for its use in the formulation and implementation of foreign trade policies of other countries, including the Russian Federation.

Thus, the problem has a scientific theoretical as well as practical significance, and that led to the choice of the theme of our research.

The purpose of the work is in comprehensive analysis of the evolution and modern aspects of the operation of the economic diplomacy model of China and identification of the main trends and prospects for its improvement.

Research objectives:

- systematize the conceptual approaches to the definition of "economic diplomacy" to clarify its essential content and basic characteristics;
- define the role of economic diplomacy in the implementation of national interests;
- trace the evolution and modern aspects of the state foreign economic expansion model of China;
- characterize trends and suggest possible ways of improving the system of Chinese economic diplomacy in the contemporary realities, challenges and threats.

Scientific novelty: systematization of conceptual approaches to understanding the essence of the economic diplomacy as a tool of the implementation of foreign policy strategy of the state; analysis of the system of economic diplomacy of China, as well as assessing the problems and prospects of further development of this institution.

Structure: the two chapters, containing four paragraphs, the conclusion and a 91-reference bibliography (thirty one of which are in foreign languages) and the enclosure. The total volume is 68 pages.

Summary: Major trends in the further development of China's economic diplomacy will correlate with the development of the economic diplomacy institution, which in future will remain the predominant tool in the implementation of China's foreign policy, focused on the realization of the entire set of foreign policy goals and objectives. Furthermore, in the context of increased dependence, primarily economic, of not only so-called developing countries, but virtually all developed countries from China, we can predict the extension of practice of economic instruments use by China while solving particular foreign policy objectives.
