

SUMMARY

Subject of the thesis: The Russian-American cooperation at the present stage

Author: Grebenyukov Sergey

Academic Adviser: Parastatov S.V., Assistant Professor, PhD, Political Science

Organization: School of International Relations, Chair of International Relations, Political Science and World Economy, Pyatigorsk State University.

Relevance of the research issue: Now the relations between the US and the Russian Federation are not more axis of the world order. They are still important for both countries and for international stability as a whole. Today the states are faced by a set of the tasks that require joint consideration.

Only the constructive approach to development of bilateral ties is able to bring the US-Russian relations to a new level and get away from their inherent asymmetry.

The asymmetry in the cooperation of the parties manifested in fact that in some areas two countries interact at a high level, declaring solidarity of purpose and full mutual support. At the same time, views of the US and Russian diverge on the international agenda. The asymmetry in cooperation of the parties is shown in some areas two states interact at rather high level, and full mutual support.

The purpose of the work is the analysis of a current state of the Russian-American cooperation.

Research objectives:

- to define models and forms of international cooperation;
- to analyze bilateral and multilateral diplomacy as a form of international cooperation;
- to reveal interests and points of rapprochement in the Russian-American cooperation;
- to consider spheres of a divergence of interests of the USA and the Russian Federation;
- to define prospects of political and economic cooperation of Russia and the USA.

Scientific novelty: It was revealed the potential of Russian-American cooperation in such areas as biomedicine and the study of infectious diseases, the interaction in the sphere of the prevention and liquidation of emergency situations.

It was carried out an analysis of the modern international cooperation between the Russian Federation and the United States and it was highlighted the main directions of cooperation of the state for an exit from a crisis situation.

Structure: the two chapters, containing four paragraphs, the conclusion and a one hundred forty eight-reference bibliography (sixty one of which are in foreign languages) and the three Appendixes. The total volume is seventy eight pages.

Summary: The Russian-US relations are quite difficult and confused now. Despite the positive tendencies in the two countries, analytics are inclined to assume that in the short term the US-Russian relations will severely strained and the most serious problems will be concentrated in the area of strategic stability.

Failures in the Russian-American cooperation are explained by the fact that the Russian Federation does not seek for integration with the Western world, it seeks to be the sovereign power which has its own unique value. Because of it Russia and the USA cannot come to consensus concerning strategic partnership.

In this regard, the question becomes relevant what have to be the relations between Russia and the United States. Most likely, at this stage, it will be difficult, almost impossible, for Russia and the USA to turn from a confrontation stage to more constructive dialogue on all global questions. However, today both states can build relationship which has to exist between great powers.