SUMMARY

The theme: Role of international organizations in the resolution of international conflicts (in the example of the North-East Africa).

The author of the paper is Dadayants E. R.

Organization: The Institute of International Relationships; the conflict resolution studies, public relations and journalism department; Pyatigorsk State Linguistic University.

The relevance of the research work: determine the need for objective scientific understanding of the causes and possible consequences occurring in Northeast Africa constant conflicts that threaten security at national, regional and global levels. As well as determine the dynamic development of the interactions of international organizations in resolving conflicts on the African continent.

The research object is role of international organizations in resolving international conflicts (for example, North-East Africa).

The research subject is aspects of international organizations to prevent and resolve these conflicts.

The research purpose. The present work aims to study the causes of armed conflicts arising on the African continent, their typology, analysis of key aspects of international and regional organizations to prevent and resolve them.

The research goals are:

1. To describe the basic causes of conflict situations on the continent.
2. To consider the basic methods and techniques of conflict prevention and resolution.
3. To evaluate the practical application of existing mechanisms of international organizations in the North-East Africa.
4. To analyze the problem of instability in North-East Africa and UN activities to resolve it.
5. To identify methods to improve the effectiveness of peacekeeping in Africa.
The theoretical and the practical work significance is research shows that it is important to gain an understanding of the essence of security, which is not connected with the theoretical abstractions, and the provision of real help to resolve critical issues of population and influence on the political, economic and natural events. Conclusions of this work can be used to critically evaluate the processes that affect both the international and regional security. Terms and conclusions of the study can serve as a basis for new research studies on the North-East Africa.

After research there was found out that the role of international organizations in the resolution of international conflicts plays a very important role in the effective maintenance of peace and security in Northeast Africa. This is reflected in the integration of the international organization with regional organizations on the African continent, which enhances the impact and prevention of conflicts across the continent.

The work structure: an introduction, 2 chapters with 5 clauses, a conclusion and references with 63 resources. Total volume of the research work is 70 pages.