

SUMMARY

Subject of the thesis: China's foreign policy in the conditions of globalization

Author: Madina Ayubova

Academic Adviser: Mishin V.E., Professor, PhD, Political Science

Organization: School of International Relations, Chair of International Relations, World Economy and International Law, Pyatigorsk State Linguistic University.

Relevance of the research issue: Globalization is one of the determining factors in the development of modern society, actively penetrating into all spheres of its life and determining the level of socio-economic development and its dynamics, the political influence of States on the world stage, depending on the degree of their involvement in globalization processes.

Analysis of China's foreign policy aimed at steady positioning of the country in the international community, transformation of Chinese society with the main trends of the global development and at the same time preserving the centuries-old cultural traditions and accumulated experience in this field is of great interest, which determines the relevance of the topic.

The purpose of the work is identifying the main specifics of China's foreign policy in modern conditions, determining the status and prospects for Russian-Chinese relations.

Research objectives:

- to analyze the essential characteristics of the phenomenon of globalisation as an objective process of the current international development;
- to study the peculiarities of foreign policy in a globalizing world;
- to analyze the involvement of China in the global development processes and to identify the priorities of the foreign policy of China in this context;
- to determine the state of and prospects for the development of Chinese-Russian relations.

Scientific novelty is in:

- the modern trends characterizing the processes of globalization and peculiarities of foreign policy of the States in these condition;
- the factors and dynamics of economic and social development of China in the context of globalization, its foreign policy activity, positioning in the international community;
- basic features of China's foreign policy both at global and regional levels, its pragmatic basis in the interests of national development;
- the author's concept of evolution, status and prospects of development of Russian-Chinese relations, their role in the world-political processes.

Structure: the two chapters, containing two paragraphs, the conclusion and a 94-reference bibliography (ten of which are in foreign languages). The total volume is 80 pages.

Summary: Modern China is modernizing rapidly. Preserving its historical cultural traditions and values, it borrows all positive and progressive, accumulated in other countries, have turned to the highly developed power of a world scale. A strategy of inclusion into globalization processes, interaction with institutions such as the World Trade Organisation and the International Monetary Fund, the growing participation in international organizations, the development of bilateral relations with the leading countries of the world and regional States, led along with the high dynamics of socio-economic development of the country and optimality of its foreign policy, to increasing role and influence of China on the international arena and important place of the Chinese-Russian relations.

Concept of foreign policy of China has changed that was dictated by the peculiarities of the historical moment. Meanwhile, all generations of foreign policy doctrine of China are forming logically explainable with historical and pragmatic viewpoint sequence of installations not coming out of the main strategic goal is to establish their place on the world stage, to ensure the security of the country, to create favorable conditions for their development, to achieve the status of a developed, powerful, influential state on the world stage. In this sense, the foreign policy of China should be considered, due to the immutability of the national priorities of China, is not as fluctuations in the long-term strategic line, but as its consistent implementation with the necessary modifications in a particular period, depending on the conditions established both in the internal and international political situation.