Topical Importance	The category of personality / impersonality refers to universal linguistic categories. It determines the "assignment of the subject of a sentence to an object in the external world and, at the same time, the degree of prominence of this object in space and time." Impersonality in its essential properties is a common fundamental concept, the main content of which is the invariant meaning of grammatical non-subjectness. The peculiarity of the Spanish language in relation to the category under study is that the meaning of impersonality is realized not on the basis of a specific grammatical form, but with the help of linguistic phenomena of lexical, morphological, syntactic levels. The relevance of the research is determined by the direction of the problem development to solve a number of complex theoretical problems of the Spanish language. For example, the definition of means of expressing the meaning of impersonality is directly related to the problem of impersonal constructions.
Goals	To justify the category of impersonality in Spanish as a complex of semantic and syntactic features and to identify means of expressing impersonality at each of these levels of language.

Tasks	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) to study the functional status of the category of impersonality; 2) to determine ways of representing impersonal meanings in Spanish in comparison with other languages; 3) to specify the ways of representing impersonal meanings in Spanish; 4) to classify groups of verbs that are used in constructions with the impersonal meaning of the Spanish language; 5) to reveal the specifics of the use of individual grammatical means for expressing the meaning of impersonality.
Theoretical Value and Practical Applicability	The theoretical significance of the research is related to the substantiation of the functional status of the category of impersonality in modern Spanish and the definition of ways to represent the meaning of impersonality at different linguistic levels (semantic, semantic-syntactic and syntactic). The practical significance of the study lies in the possibility of using the results of the study in practical exercises in the Spanish language, and also as an additional material for the course of the theoretical grammar of the Spanish language.
Implementation advice	It is recommended to use the data, including empirical material, obtained on the basis of a sample from the Corpus of Modern Spanish, for the organization of the educational process. The ratio of the frequency of examples of means of expressing impersonality allows them to be distributed in training programs in an appropriate way.
