The organization – customer: Pyatigorsk state University

The relevance of the research topic. The mechanism for the protection of human rights in international law in modern conditions is a complex legal complex that includes both domestic and international means of protection.

In this context, normative acts are meant, as well as state-oriented bodies of the state, on the other hand, international treaties and the bodies created on their basis are called to ensure the implementation of generally accepted norms.

The object of the study is an international system for ensuring legal guarantees for the protection of human rights in the modern world.

The subject of the study is the patterns of functioning of the mechanism for ensuring legal guarantees for the protection of human rights in modern conditions.

The purpose of the study is to analyze the problems of the effectiveness of the mechanism for protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms and the implementation of international norms on the issue under consideration in national legislation.

Summing up the general result of the WRC, it is possible to state with assurance that the working capacity and functioning of the international mechanism for the protection of human rights is one of the most important manifestations of the effectiveness of the international legal order and, above all, the most important postulate of international law - pacta sunt seryanda. It can be argued that the manifestation of this mechanism is the reduction by one or another state of its own legislation and jurisprudence in accordance with the fundamental decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, as well as the consideration of a number of recommendations expressed by universal monitoring bodies, which in turn proves the existence in the international Community of a fully effective security mechanism for the protection of human rights.
