Zagrayevskaya T.B.

The variation of the phonetic system of the Russian language in the North Caucasus

The article is devoted to the peculiarities of the Russian-language pronouncing variants in the speech of monolingual people on the territory of the North Caucasus and bilingual people inhabiting the national republics of North-Caucasus region.

The author finds out the reasons for various accent features appearing in the Russian speech of bilinguals as a result of the inter-language interference process, acting on the segment and supra-segment levels.

Key words: variation, phonetic system, Russian language, bilingualism, accent feature, inter-language interference, poly-ethnicism, level of analysis.