Subject matter: Transformations in Translation from English into Russian.
Author: Laura T. Khubieva, 5th year student, Institute of Translatology and Multilanguage Studies.
Supervisor of the project: E. Yu. Shamlidi, Professor of the Chair of Theory and Practice of Translation and Interpretation.

ABSTRACT

This graduation paper deals with the problem of language transformations, and also the ways and methods of their usage in translation practices.

The first part is devoted to the study of types of linguistic transformations, namely, their basic characteristics and peculiarities. Various aspects of rendering travel terminology are also analyzed.

The main goal of the second part of the paper is the identification of the methods of searching for the equivalence and adequacy of translating this terminology in texts. The next step aims at revealing main difficulties when translating texts of this type.

The conclusion contains basic results of the investigation performed.

The present research is important because its results can be used in giving practical and theoretical linguistic courses, translation training courses and in replenishing and updating further theoretical studies in this line.