The system of the person nomination in English is presented as a multi-level typology. In other words, it is an aggregate of the individual types of the person nomination characterized by the uniformity from the point of view of the nomination method and, in some cases, it is characterized by other nominative derivational means.

The variety of English person nomination is not confined to the types listed in the work. It is well known that in English it is quite widely used some combinations of nominative means. Among them we have studied derivational suffixes, abbreviation, conversion, abbreviated suffixes and names built with the help of prefixes and suffixes. It was found that the nomination of each of the types is more adapted to indicate a person for any certain signs.
